J. W. Grant, baker and confectioner, came to Gaylord two years ago last June, buying out the establishment of John Hanley. Mr. Grant is a practical baker with years of experience, and the goods turned out in his line are first class in every respect. His business has prospered amazingly since coming to Gaylord and is in every respect very satisfactory. In addition to a fine line of confectionery, he has also has on sale a good assortment of shelf groceries, fruits and nuts. Mr. Grant proposes another year to erect a fine store building, which his growing business fully warrants, and where he can better care for the wants of his customers.
