

A. D. Marshall, C. C. Commissioner

This issue of the Herald would be incomplete were its Circuit Court Commissioner Anthony D. Marshall not briefly mentioned. He is a modest and unassuming man and wouldn't stand for his picture in the paper – which is just like him. He and his wife and infant daughter came to Gaylord when it was a mere hole in the woods, and have always taken a deep interest in matters social, political and religious, and as a careful and accurate disciple of Blackstone his is universally trusted and admired. By frugality and industry he has acquired a pleasant home and good business property, and as a man and citizen is a valuable acquisition to any community.
